PREFACE.

The Victoria Jubilee Pahlavi Text Committee, at a meeting held on 25th November 1909, advised the Trustees of the Parsee Punchayet to publish the Pahlavi Text of the Legends of Kershasp and recommended Mr. Bomanji Nasarvanji Dhabhar, M.A., for the preparation of the Text. The Trustees accepted the recommendation on 10th December 1909 and entrusted the work to Mr. Dhabhar on 14th December 1909.

The Committee, at a meeting held on 14th November 1910, similarly advised the publication of the Pahlavi Rivayat preceding and following the Dadistan-i Dinik and recommended the same gentleman for the preparation of that text. The Trustees accepted the recommendation on 29th November 1910 and entrusted the work to Mr. Dhabhar on 9th December 1910. These two texts are here published in one volume. This is the fifth Pahlavi Book published from the above fund, the first four being the following :—

1. Nirangistan
2. Madigân-i-Hazâr Dâdistân.
3. Bundahishn.
4. Namakthâ-i Manushchihar. (The Epistles of Manushchihar).

While the first three of the above 4 texts were printed by the photozinco process, the texts of the present volume form the second number of the Pahlavi texts published in types.

The texts of the following Pahlavi books are in the press and under preparation and will be shortly published :—

1. Shâyast-lâ-Shâyast.
2. The Writings of Zâdsparam.
3. The Pahlavi Khordeh Avesta.

The Trustees offer their best thanks to the following gentlemen and Institutions for kindly lending their manuscripts for the use of the editor :—

1. Dastur Kaikhoshro Jamaspji Jamaspâsa.

2. Pestonji Jamshedji Kapadia, Esq. (of Bulsar), whose manuscript was kindly procured for this edition by Mr. Manockji Rustomji Unwalla.

3. The Royal Asiatic Society of London.

4. The Meherji Rana Library of Navsari.

They also offer their best thanks to Mr. Dhabhar for the care with which he has collated the manuscripts and for his interesting introduction.

INTRODUCTION.

The text of the Dâdistân-i Dînîk in some of its MSS. is preceded and followed by a great variety of miscellaneous texts on Zoroastrian ceremonies, customs and legends, generally known as the Pahlavi Rivâyat. This Rivâyat is here published for the first time. It is compiled from far older Pahlavi writings. The author does not give any indication of his name as well as of the title of the book, or of the circumstances which influenced him to compile it. He enters upon his subject without any preamble and the various extracts are grouped together without any gradation. The style of the composition is simple and it is written in "fairly grammatical Pahlavi"[1] although there are indications of the text being corrupted at various places. As shown in the foot-notes to the text, a great many Pahlavi books, e. g., the Pahlavi Vendidad, Pahlavi Yaçna, Shâyast-lâ-Shâyast, Dâdistân, Bundahishn, Dinkard, Bahman Yasht, Ardai Virâf, Minokherad, Nirangistan, &c. are laid under contribution by the author. An English translation of two subjects only, viz., (1) the Legend relating to the soul of Kershâsp and (2) Khvêtûk-das has been given by Dr. West in S. B. E. Vol. XVIII. The first extract on Farvardegân days has been translated in Gujarati in the Report of the Proceedings of the Society formed for the purpose of rectifying the Parsee Calendar.[2]

Internal as well as external evidence shows that the Rivâyat was composed after the Arab Conquest. The writer in one of his extracts refers to the interference of the prevailing Government with the religion, which is a clear indication of the book being written in Mohammedan times. In extract No. XVII, evil rulers (dûsh-pâtakhshâân) and foreign enemies (an-aîr dûshmin) are said to injure the person and property, including the Atash-Behrâm, of the faithful. (See p. 52§7 and pp. 53-54 §§ 10-11 of the text.) Again, the vehemence with which Khvêtûk-das (marriage among relations) is advocated by the writer points to his apprehension of the community being perverted to a foreign faith which was, no doubt, Mohammedanism. The preponderance of ceremonial matter over the other subjects treated of, besides showing that the author belonged to the priestly profession, leads us to infer that, after the subversion of the Empire, when the religion was in danger and people were turning away from the Mazdayasnian faith, there was the greater necessity to make the people conform to the established rituals and customs. Even the invocatory formula at the commencement of the book, viz., pavan shem-i Yazat Dâtgar points to a later period of the composition of the Rivâyat. Thus far, the internal evidence points to Mohammedan times for the compilation of the Rivâyat.

External evidence as to the date of composition of the Pahlavi Rivâyat:—Kama Asa of Cambay, in the Rivâyat[1] known after him, has given a Persian version of nearly three-fourths of the Pahlavi Rivâyat, some extracts whereof are borrowed seriatim[2] and paraphrased in Persian, as seen from the foot-notes to the text. This shows that the Pahlavi Rivâyat must have been the predecessor of its Persian version given generally with greater or less modifications. Now Kama Asa of Cambay brought his Rivâyat from Persia in A. Y. 896 i. e. A. D. 1527: hence we can fix the date of composition of our Palhavi Rivâyat to be at least prior to that of Kama Asa's Persian Rivâyat.

We shall here notice a few extracts of our Rivâyat, the others being too well-known to need any detailed description, as seen from the contents.

On Farvardegân days, &c. (No. I). This passage is important in as much as it proves that even after the Arab conquest the Zoroastrians of Irân correctly observed the Farardegân days which are ten in number and not eighteen as generally observed by the majority of the Indian Zoroastrians. Secondly, as the month Adar is herein shown to have connection with the farohars or fravashis, this passage, among others, is quoted[1] as showing that there was a time when the religious year of the Zoroastrians ended with the month Adar and that the month Dae was the first month of the Parsee calendar. The rectification of the Parsee Calendar was a subject in which the late Mr. K. R. Cama had taken a lifelong interest and latterly we see the fruits of his labour embodied in the Gujarati pamphlet entitled "Researches into the rôj-mâh of the Zoroastrians" published in 1904. The controversy on the rectification of the Parsee Calendar was at one time very fierce as the most orthodox portion of the community could not be persuaded to make any innovation in the prevailing custom, however faulty it might be ; but, thanks to the persistent and laudable efforts of Mr. Cama in this direction, a large portion of the community now recognise the necessity of having a correct Parsee Calendar, but whether the first month in this rectified calendar should be Farvardin, as it is now, or Dae, is still a disputed point, not only with the orthodox and the unlettered portion of the community but even with Avesta and Pahlavi scholars.

On Khvêtûk-das, (No. VIII of the Pahlavi Rivâyat.) This subject is exhaustively treated by Dr. West in Appendix III of S. B. E. Vol. XVIII, and by Shams-ul-Ulma Dastur Darab Dastur Peshotan Sanjana, in his Pamphlet entitled "The Alleged practice of Consanguineous Marriages in Ancient Irân." A rejoinder from Dr. Casartelli on the subject is given in the Babylonian and Oriental Record (July 1889) wherein the author controverts some points adduced by Dastur Darab in his learned essay. Taking into consideration the extracts on Khvêtûk-das from our Pahlavi Rivâyat only, we notice that the writer, perhaps a priest, attempts under cover of anonymity to foist the practice of Khvêtûk-das on an unwilling people. That the custom was in every way repugnant to the people and that the generality of the people must have lent it no countenance is at once gathered from the fact of its being fulsomely extolled by the writer in the different extracts bearing on the subject. In palming it off on the people in the name of religion, the unknown writer is compelled to confess his failure.[1] That he was given the cold shoulder in this matter may further be inferred from the fact that Kâmdin Khambâyeti, who, at the express wish of the Indian Zoroastrians, had gone all the way to Persia for collecting information on religious questions, and had prepared in A.Y. 896, i.e. A.D. 1527, the Rivâyat known after him and incorporated into it nearly three-fourths of this Pahlavi Rivâyat, has deleted therefrom all the extracts on Khvêtûk-das. One thing must be noted in connection with this subject. The writer speaking in the name of religion introduces almost all the extracts thereon by one of the following phrases : " denmanich min awistâk paêtâk ; hanâ yemlelund ; paêtâk aîgh ; denmanich paêtâk ; jîvâk paêtâk ; Zartosht min Auharmazd pûrsit ; denmanich min dîn paêtâk ; min dîn paêtâk." As Dr. West observes elsewhere, "this mode of introducing quotations is common to Pahlavi texts," but it is "a fallacious guide" for identifying the extracts on Khvêtûk-das and also others with the Avesta. In fact, not a single extract on khvetuk-das introduced in the manner described above can be identified with the Avesta. Whatever might be the cause of advocating this pernicious custom unauthorised by religion, one thing was uppermost in the mind of the writer, viz., as admitted by him in one of the extracts, there was the fear of perversion to another faith of members of the community which was fast dwindling down in his time (See p. 10, § 9 of the first extract on Khvêtûk-das). On the contrary, in pre-Islamic times, when there was no fear of the community being perverted to a foreign faith, there existed laws and regulations for priviledged wives who were even foreigners. (See Dinkard, Bk. VIII, Ch. 20§ 29 in S. B. E. Vol. 37, p. 58 and Dinkard, Bk. IX Ch. 31, § 8 in S. B. E. Vol. 37, p. 100). Hence it is reasonable to infer that the extreme kind of khvêtûk-das (viz., next-of-kin marriage) must have been vehemently advocated by the author in order that the community might not turn away from the practice of the normal khvêtûk-das (viz., marriage among first cousins)[1].

teenth fargard of the Sûdgar Nask, summarised in Dinkard IX, Chápter XV gives a succint account of the exploits of Kershâsp. As this subject is fully treated by Dr. West in Appendix I to Vol. XVIII of the S. B. E. series, it need not be repeated here. Firdousi is silent on this subject of Kershâsp's adventures, not that he was unacquainted with the traditions which had gathered round the hero, but because he was forced to curtail or to neglect them as his great grand-son Rustom was to play such a grand part in his world renowned epic, more than one-third of which, as we know, is taken up by the episodes of his exploits. That Firdousi was fully cognisant of Kershâsp's adventures may also be seen from the fact that the fight of Sâm[1] with the dragon (azdahâ), as described in the Shâh-nameh, very nearly corresponds to that of Kershâsp with Azi Sravara, as described in the Avesta and Pahlavi literature. Sâm while giving an account of the services rendered to his sovereign lord Minocher describes only his encounter with the huge dragon and Firdousi makes short work of such other adventures of Sâm by the following remarks :—

The legendary narratives of Kershâsp, gathered from oral traditions[2] and left untouched by Firdousi have been put in verse under the title of the Kershâsp-nameh by one of

(1) According to Firdousi, Sâm is the grandson of Kershâsp, but in the Avesta the latter is known by his family name Sâma Kershâspa and hence called only Sâm in some Pahlavi books or Sâmân Kershâsp, as in our Rivâyat (See p. 147.)

(2) One of the Dehkâns who had collected such traditions of the family of the feudatory princes of Seistan under the decadence of the Persian Empire was Azâd Sarv, an inhabitant of Merv who claimed his descent from Sâm Nariman himself. Firdousi thus refers to him in eulogistic terms :—

the poets[1] of the school of Firdousi who completed it in A. H. 458, i. e. A. D. 1066.

Mohl in the preface to his Shâh-nameh thus speaks of the Persian epic traditions which still lingered after the decadence of the Empire and which were made use of, in imitation of Firdousi, by Persian poets who flourished after him :—

"He [Firdousi] has reproduced only a part of the national traditions of the Persians as they existed in the times of the Sassanians. The Book of Kings is far from having drained up all the traditions that were then extant. The immense success that he had naturally gave an unusual literary importance to all the traditions written or oral that successive generations had transmitted, and Firdousi had soon a crowd of imitators like all other men who vividly and naturally touch a national sentiment. Almost all the heroes of whom Firdousi speaks, and others of whom he does not speak became the subjects of epic biographies. The excessive length of some of these works not only proves the abundance of material which still existed but also the interest which people took

D. 1030-1040), i. e., at least twenty-six or twenty-seven years before the composition of the Garshâspnâma, the latter must needs be the work of a later author who most likely was Ali bin Ahmad al Asadi al-Tûsi with the two kunyas, Abu-alhasan and Abû-almansûr, the son of the older Asadi" (Vide p. 558, No. 893, of the catalogue of Persian MSS. in the India office Library, Vol. I. 1903.)

in it. For these never ending adventures recounted without art or grace would have found neither readers nor hearers if the interest of the theme had not supported the mediocrity of the form ....These poets have attached themselves with a preference almost exclusive to the history of the family of Rustom who had the hereditary government of Seistan or Nimrouz and who descended from Jamshid. It was the heroic family par excellence and Firdousi had already devoted to some of its members the greater part of his work without drying up the sources ot the traditions which were pleased to attribute to them almost all the prodigies of bravery that made up the warlike glory of Persia. His imitators seized upon these traditions and although several of their works have been lost, there remain enough of them to form an almost complete epic series of the biographies of the princes of Seistan. These are the Kershap Nameh, Sam Nameh, Framrouz Nameh, Jehangir Nameh, Banugushasp Nameh, Barzor Nameh and Behemen Nameh.

"The Kershasp Namah is the only poem of the series which has acquired a certain reputation.........The author takes the history of the family of the princes of Seistan for his theme; he relates the flight of Jamshed, and his marriage with the daughter of the king of Kabul, then he traces briefly the lives of the descendants of Jamshed upto Kershasp, then he enters into his subject and recounts in detail the adventures of the heroes, their battle with Zohâk, their expeditions to Turan, Africa and India, their discussions with the Brahmins, the wonders of the isles of the ocean, &c. The character of the work is entirely epic and the sources from which it is drawn are evidently analogous to those made use of by Firdousi. There is a grander medley of marvellous tales of what Kershasp sees in foreign lands and especially in the Isles of the Indian Ocean, which appears to come from the seamen on the coast of the Persian Gulf. It would appear as if one was sometimes reading Sindbad the Sailor."[1]

The story of Kershâsp, as given in a Persian Rivâyat[2] is translated by Ervad E. K. Antia in the Spiegel Memorial Volume, edited by Shams-ul-Ulma Dr. J. J. Modi.

As in the case of Kershâsp, there were many traditions of his ancester Jamshed, current among the Iranians and left unrecorded by Firdousi. One such is narrated by the Pahlavi writers, viz., his adoption of the evil ways of the Daevas and the penitence for his sins (No. VIII, pp. 14-16 and No. XXXI, of our text). The stories of Kershâsp and Jamshed as given in the Pahlavi literature have much in common between them. Jamshed was deluded by the Daevas[3] and Kershasp by the Pairikas.[4] In the beginning, both did a world of good to mankind and thus furthered the cause of righteousness. But, in both cases, no amount of meritorious deeds could bestow salvation on their souls. Jamshed's fall was due to his pride; Kershâsp's fall was due to the heinous sin of ill-treating the fire held in high veneration by the Mazdayasnians from times immemorial.[5] For their deviation from the path of rectitude, both after their death had been hurled down headlong from their high estate into hell for eternity. In both cases it was the intervention of Zartosht that procured them their souls' release from their pitiable plight and then

(4) See Vendidâd I § 9.

(5) From the 22nd fargard of the Sûdgar Nask, § 6 (S. B. E. Vol. 37, p 225) we are led to infer that Kershasp was not a Mazdayasnian, and Pah. Vendidad I makes him an idol-worshipper.

only they were allowed to remain in Hamistagan,[1] a state mid-way between heaven and hell. The stories of both, as shown by Prof. Darmesteter, have been borrowed by the Jews and recorded in the Talmud.[2] According to some critics, the fall of Jamshed is even referred to in the Ahunavaiti Gathâ, Yaçna 32 § 8.[3]

Similar to these remnants of old traditions about Kershâsp and Jamshed, we find one recorded in the Pahlavi Rivâyat about Kaikhusro and Kangdez, pp. 159-162 (No. XLIX), an episode well-known to the readers of the Shahnameh

The story of Feridoon who is described in the Avesta as the first healer of men is of the same class as the Persian traditions described above. In Avesta, Feridoon's name is connected with the art of healing, and in the Pahlavi and Persian Rivâyats, many nirangs or incantations which, on their recital, would drive away diseases of every kind, both physical and mental, are ascribed to Feridoon. One such incantation for driving away fever is given in our Pahlavi Rivâyat following the Dadistân-î Dînîk (No. LXIII, p. 201). This charm consists of some three or four words which, al-

[1] The Pahlavi Rivâyat and its Persian version, about the fate of the soul of Kershâsp, do not say whither the soul of Kershâsp goes after the intervention of Zartosht, but the 14th fargard of the Sudgar Nask (S. B. E. Vol. 37 p. 199) from which this legend of Kershâsp is taken sends him to Hamistagân.

[2] Le Zend Avesta, Tome I, p. 89 note and Tome II, p. 624, note 49.

[3] Interpret this difficult passage how we may, the Pahlavi version of this Gathic stanza puts down Jamshed in the category of a Daeva. Even Firdousi mentions Jamshed in the same strain as Zohak who was a Daeva incorporate. In Kaikhusro's rejoinder to Afrasiab's message in the Shahnameh, we read the following lines :—

دیگر آنکه گفتی که دیو پلید ــ دل و راه من سوي دوزخ کشید
چنین بود ضحاک و هم جمشید — چو شد شان دل از نیکوي ناامید

Again, the soliloquy of Kaikhusro wishing to retire from the world has the following :—

شوم بدکنش همچو ضحاک وجم — که با تور و سلم اندر آیم بهم

though they baffle our attempts at proper interpretation[1], can be explained by a reference to the paper on "An Avesta Amulet for contracting Friendship" in the Anthropological Papers published by Shams-ul-Ulma Dr. Jivanji Jamshedji Modi, whereof the word ودالا so ably interpreted by the author throws light on the word وسلا forming part of the incantation of our text.[2] In connection with this subject it may be mentioned that the Irani priests still recite such nirangs or incantations called "Afsûn-i Shah Feridoon,"[3] when called upon to do so, by the bedside of the sick.

The Pahlavi Rivâyat in a passage (No. LXIV, pp. 202-206) immediately following the "Incantation for Fever" makes mention of several mohras (shells or beads) of different colours which, tied to the arm of a sick person, would drive away his disease This, again, is a remnant of old Persian traditions to which Firdousi alludes in one of his famous episodes. According to the Shah-nameh, the Iranian hero Gastaham who became physically disabled in an encounter with his adversary was cured of his malady with the aid of a mohra tied to his arm and with the recital of nirangs or incantations by physi-

(1) The reason why these spells or mantras are written in an enigmatical language may perhaps be ascertained from the fact that Zoraster is strictly enjoined by Ahuramazda not to reveal them to anyone outside the pale of close relationship or to persons beyond the priestly profession (See Yasht 4 § 9 and Yasht 14 § 46).

(2) Three more papers in his collection of the "Anthropological Papers" by the same learned author, viz, (1) Charms or Amulets for some diseases of the Eye (pp. 43-50), (2) Nirang-i-Jashan-i Burzigarân (pp. 122-130), (3) Two Iranian Incantations for burying Hair and Nails (pp. 340-354) would form interesting reading in connection with this subject. Cf. also Ervad Kavasji Edalji Kanga's Paper on "King Feridûn and a few of his Amulets and Charms" (pp. 141-45) with the prefatory words thereon by Shaml-ul-Ulma Dr. J. J. Modi (pp. LXIII-LXV) in the Cama Memorial Volume.

(3) Firdousi also calls Feridoon an afsûngar (enchanter) In the Shah-nameh Afrâsiab, describing his descent from Feridoon, thus speaks of him :—

...... ترا من پدر مادرم — ز تخـم فریدون افسونگرم .

cians called out by king Kaikhusro from different parts of the world.[1]

The following MSS. are used in the preparation of the text of the Pahlavi Rivâyat :—

BK. 10″ × 6¼″ × 1¼″. A MS. written in 941 A.Y. (A.D. 1572) by Marzpân Farîdûn Vâhrôm Rûstahm Bûndâr Malkâ-mardân Dînyâr in Kirmân in the district of Dahîgân. It contains (1) Pahlavi Rivâyat; (2) Dâdistân-i Dînîk ; (3) Pahlavi Rivâyat ; (4) the Epistles of Mânushchîhar; (5) the Selections of Zâdsparam ; (6) miscellaneous texts on (a) the omnicient wisdom, (b) the Evil Spirit, (c) the creation of Ormazd, (d) Kangdez, (e) Var-i-Jam Kart, and (7) Visparad (Avesta and Pahlavi) from I § 4 to X § 2. This is the only MS. now extant which gives a complete text of the Pahlavi Rivâyat preceding the Dâdistân. Several folios in the middle and some at the end are missing. The missing folios in the middle are replaced by new ones in a later writing. The text of the Pahlavi Rivâyat is based on this MS. The first part of the Rivâyat (pp. 1-42 of the printed text) seems to have been copied by MR1. and J (described below) from this original. This MS. was used by Dr. West. See S. B. E. Vol. V, Intro. p. XXXIII and p. XLIX; also S. B. E. Vol. XVIII, Intro. pp. XV-XVII. It belongs to Mr. Pestonji Jamshedji Kapadia of Bulsar and was kindly lent by him for collation.

[1] Cf. the following lines from the Shah-nameh :—

J. $8\frac{1}{8}''$ × $5\frac{3}{10}''$ × 1″. A MS. of the Dâdistân and its accompaniments. The oldest portion upto Ep. I, Ch. VII § 4 is written in 1188 A.Y., and a further portion upto Ep. II, Ch. VI § 2 bears the date 1210 A. Y. Written by Ervad Jamshed bin Dastur Edulji bin Dastur Bahmanji Jamshedji Jamaspji Asaji Faridunji. The MS. ends at Ep. II, Ch. VI § 2. The first part of the Pahlavi Rivâyat (p. 1 to p 30 l. 4 of the printed text) is more recent and seems to have been copied from BK. This MS. was also used by Dr. West in settling the text of the Dâdistân and some portions of the Pahlavi Rivâyat. MS. described in S. B. E. Vol. XVIII, Intro. pp. XVII-XVIII and S B.E. Vol. V. Intro. p. XLIX, ll. 18-25. It belongs to Dastur Kaikhusro Jamaspji Jamasp Asa and was kindly lent by him for collation.

MR. $12\frac{3}{5}''$ × $7\frac{1}{5}''$ × $1\frac{3}{4}''$. MS. belonging to the Meherji Rana Library of Navsari. Written in 1241-42. A. Y., by the late Dastur Erachji Sorabji Meherji Rana, a well-read scholar and a careful copyist, to boot. The Pahlavi Rivâyat preceding the Dâdistân is fully copied out from BK., (described above) and the second part of this MS. is an exact reproduction of TK written about 900 A. Y. (described by Dr. West in S. B. E. Vol. V, Intro. p. XXXIII and p. XLIX and in S. B. E. Vol. XVIII. Intro. pp. XVI-XVII) otherwise called T D (Vide the Bûndahishn, edited by the late Ervad T. D. Anklesaria, Intro. p. XVIII, and the Preface to the Dâdistân-i-Dînîk, Part I, edited by the same scholar). MR. is important in as much as the Selections of Zâdsparam are more extensive in it than in BK wherein the final folios are missing. A minute description of TK or TD is given in Gujarati by Dastur Erachji at the end of MR. As this TK, now called TD, was not available, I have used MR. The Pahlavi Rivâyat preceding the Dâdistân, as given in MR, being simply a reproduction of the text of BK, this MS. is used for settling the text of one subject only of the Rivâyat, viz. "The Admonitions of Adarbad Mârespand: (No. LXII, pp. 193-200 of the printed text) as it is omitted in BK. (See p. 193, note 6 of the printed text). Dastur Erachji has also made out another copy of TK or TD in 1241-42 A. Y., which is now in the Mulla Furoz Library.

MR1. 12$\frac{2}{3}$" × 8" × 1$\frac{1}{4}$". MS. belonging to the Meherji Rana Library of Navsari and written by the late Dastur Erachji in 1236 A. Y. from a copy (undated) of the late Ervad Minocherji Jamaspji Vachha. It contains the Dâdistân with its accompaniments upto Ep. II, Ch. VI § 2. The first part of the Pahlavi Rivâyat (pp. 1-42 of the printed text) seems to have been copied from BK, or from a copy made from BK. Another copy of this MS. (with the exception of the first part of the Pahlavi Rivâyat preceding the Dâdistân, pp. 1-42 of the printed text) was made out by Dastur Erachji in the same year and is now in the Mulla Feeroz Library.

W. A MS. of several foolscap quarto leaves, in the handwring of the late Dr. E. W. West, here called W, was kindly lent by the Royal Asiatic Society of London to the Bombay University at the request of the Trustees of the Parsee Punchayet, Bombay. This MS. contained the transliteration, in the upper half of each page, and the translation, in the lower half, of the following texts:—

(1) The Epistles; (2) the contents of the fourteenth fargard of the Sûdgar Nask from Dinkard, Book IX; (3) a legend about the soul of Kershâsp; (4) on Khvêtûkdas; (5) Pahlavi Vendidâd 8 §§ 271-299; (6) Pahlavi Vd. 9 §§ 1-145. The transliteration of the Epistles by Dr. West in this MS. was based on the text of the unique MS. K35 described in S. B. E. Vol. V, Intro. pp. XLVIII—L and S. B. E. Vol. XVIII, Intro. pp. XV—XVII. and was used by me for settling the text of the Epistles edited by me in 1912. The transliteration of the text of "A Legend about the soul of Kershâsp" was based by Dr. West on the MSS. BK and J, both combined, as "in K35 this portion of the Rivâyat has been lost, with the first 71 folios of that MS." (See S. B. E. Vol. XVIII, p. 378, note 2). This transliteration wherein are noticed insignificant variations in some places, as seen from the foot-notes to our text of "The Legend about the soul of Kershâsp" is used for collation with the MSS. described above. This MS. W. bears the date 1882, the year in which S. B. E. Vol. XVIII containing a translation of the texts described above, with that of the Dâdistân, was published.

My attention was drawn by Shams-ul-Ulma Dr. Jivanji Jamshedji Modi, Secretary to the Parsee Punchayet, to another original MS. of the Pahlavi Rivâyat, preserved in the India Office Library. This is No. CCXXVIII of "the Catalogue of Two Collections of Persian and Arabic Manuscripts preserved in the India Office Library" compiled by E. Denison Ross and E. G. Browne in 1902. It contains 33 folios, each written 17 lines to the page. It is described by the compilers on p. 139 and by Dr. West in a supplementary note on pp. 171-172. From its description it appears that it is an Iranian MS. of the Pahlavi Rivâyat, but it is a mere fragment of the whole text.

For the headings in English of the different subjects and for the division of the subjects into sections, the editor is responsible.
